

THE OTHER WHITEHOUSE

If you've been fantasising over a career fixed in fashion, the Whitehouse Institute of Design is the ultimate place to pump up your portfolio. And where better to study than the fashion capital of Australia itself? With an already reputable campus in Sydney, founder of the design school, Leanne Whitehouse, thought it was time to offer creative types in Victoria the same deal. This year, the heritage classified Royal Mail Exchange has become classroom to hundreds of design students undergoing courses in fashion, design, styling and creative direction. As well as a full-time Bachelor of Design program, Melbourne's Whitehouse Institute runs part-time certificate and a collection of attractive short courses. If the Melbourne school takes after its sister in Sydney, you can expect some seriously brilliant fashionistas lurking through its freshly painted corridors. Hot graduates from the Sydney campus include sassy successes Camilla Topper-Freeman (of Camilla and Marc fame) and Kerryn Jacobs of Aussie fashion house Bracewell.

Cassie Steel

Apply now to study in Melbourne at the Melbourne Exchange Building, Bourke Street, Melbourne, or in Sydney, Level 3, 55 Liverpool Street, City. Visit www.whitehouse-design.edu.au, or email enquiry@whitehouse-design.edu.au or phone 1300 551 433 for further information.